Forest Hills appoints new superintendent

At a Nov. 7 Forest Hills Board of Education special meeting, the Board approved Scot Thomas Prebles as superintendent, effective Jan. 1.

“Scot is a dedicated educator who personifies a balance between the personal side of education and the business side. His interpersonal skills combined with his vision for excellence will provide continued success for our schools,” said Randy Smith, Board of Education president. “With experience as a superintendent in two of Ohio’s highest-performing districts, we strongly believe Scot will serve our community very well and will support students, staff and parents as we work to carry on Forest Hills’ tradition of excellence.”

Currently the superintendent at Brecksville-Broadview Heights City Schools (Cleveland-area suburbs), a position he has served in for more than five years, Prebles’ career in education spans 30 years. In that time, he has also served as the Granville Exempted Village Schools superintendent; the director of secondary education and high school principal for Worthington City Schools; and as a teacher, coach and high school principal with Edgewood City Schools, Kings Local City Schools and Wilmington City Schools.

“I am excited by this opportunity to serve Forest Hills as superintendent and work collaboratively with parents, students, employees and the Board to ensure that all FHSD students are engaged in learning and that residents are engaged in our district,” said Prebles, who earned both his bachelor’s and master’s degrees in education from Miami University. “Together, we will empower each other to excel to new heights.”
